Map of Blythburgh 1925 with residents' names	58

INTRODUCTION

The first English census was conducted in 1801. Until 1841 they were essentially headcounts. From 1841 an increasing amount of information was collected. Individual's names, gender, age, place of birth, relationship, status or occupation, household composition and addresses can be read from the enumerators' forms, available on line up to the 1911 census. The 1921 census is available on line but cannot be searched by location. Addresses are scarce in the early years and later the road names may not match those used today. 'The Street' is over-used and Priory Road, Church Road and Chapel Road do not appear. But assuming that the enumerators travelled through the parish in a systematic way, locations can be identified in relation to known addresses. Names can never be completely mapped for past years because an unknown number of properties have been demolished.

Blythburgh parish is covered by two enumeration districts. One includes the village and the hamlet of Bulcamp: 'All of that part of the parish which lies to the east and the north of the road from Westleton by Toby's Barn to Wenhaston, including the hamlet of Bulcamp'. The other includes Hinton with Thorington. The difficult task of disentangling the Hinton entries has not been attempted.

Errors are inevitable in this type of data base. The enumerators may have misheard or misspelled a name. Their handwriting can be difficult to interpret. For a name search it is important to consider names with similar spelling or sound. Where a household has lasted from one census to the next, a comparison of entries may resolve apparent inconsistencies.

The enumerators after 1841 numbered the properties. Different number sets are used for each census. So, for example, the number for the White Hart Inn will be different in each census.

This index includes the surnames of all the individuals counted in the census. The full name of the first-mentioned for each household is given, with their status or occupation, and the size of the household. The first-named will usually be the householder but some may have been away. Locations are as numbered by the enumerator, with more detail if given. Names are as written by the enumerators. Names have not been corrected even where an error seems likely. Editorial additions are in square brackets.
